Man-power is one of the necessary resources for industries and in India we have it in abundance. But the mere possession of man-power is not enough. The ordinary man in the street who may never have had any education cannot be put straight way into a workshop or factory. He has to be trained by others who know exactly what to teach him. After you have got your trained man-power, you want something else to run factories and workshops, that is motive-power. One great source of this is coal. Coal engenders heat and give us steam without which few industries can get along. We have very large deposits of coal in India.
